MILITARY ACADEMIES

The United States service academies represent the military's most outstanding opportunity. Graduates of a military academy are considered "elite", the very best representatives of the military and civilian sector. The education provided is outstanding and personalized. Military academies do not charge for tuition; the cost, including room, board, and medical and dental care, is paid for entirely by the U.S. Government.

Academy appointments are very difficult to get. The competition is extremely competitive, and the application process should be stamped no later than the fall of the junior year. Students and parents should see their guidance counselor to discuss requirements, application procedures, and obligations.
